Do you have a beneficiary on your accounts?

You are probably thinking “Why do I need one of those?”.

The simplest answer, is so you can make sure your money goes to the people you want it to go to instead of going to the court.

Federal regulations allow an account holder to designate another person to receive the balance of the account in the event of their death. The beneficiaries are entitled to receive the entire balance of available funds from the account without waiting for a reading of a will or the release of the estate by a probate judge or administrator. The beneficiaries can secure the funds simply by presenting a copy of the account holder’s death certificate and a valid photo ID. Ensure your money goes to the people you want it to and not be held up in the judicial system. Stop in to the credit union and ask anyone for assistance on naming your beneficiaries today!
